Washington, D.C.

The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) is unable to determine whether international airports in Venezuela that serve as the last point of departure for non-stop flights to the United States maintain and carry out effective security measures. This notice is being issued because the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) has been unable to assess whether these airports meet the security standards adopted by the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), as mandated by 49 U.S.C. 44907.
